HISTORY OF CEDAR MOUNTAIN

The Battle of Cedar Mountain

Also known as Slaughter's Mountain

On the blazing hot afternoon of August 9, 1862 a few miles south of Culpeper, Virginia, Confederate Major General Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson led his troops into battle against Union Major General Nathaniel Banks' corps of the Army of Virginia. The five hour fight saw four Federal brigades surge across corn and wheat fields against three Confederate divisions formed along the road, fence lines, and in the woods.

Culpeper's native son, Major General A. P. Hill, sealed the Confederate victory when his division re-formed Jackson's crumbled line and led the charge that turned the tide of the battle. For Hill and the other Culpeper men engaged, this was a personal battle to liberate their homes, friends, and family from the Union occupation.

3,800 men were killed or wounded in the shadow of Cedar Mountain by the end of the day — the deadliest day in Culpeper's history.

DIRECTIONS:

Directions: 23042 Cedar Mountain Road,
Rapidan, VA. Just south of Culpepper on US
Route 15.

Watch for signs on road and follow to parking area.

TRAILS: The trails are the same ones used by Bull Run Hunt Club. They are on private land and we ask that you respect the land owners that have given us permission to ride on their land by staying on trails and not riding in planted fields.

The trails are mostly gravel. Shoes are recommended for the horses. The trails are in the mountains with some hills. You may pass by cows in pastures next to the trails.
This ride is on old Civil War battle ground with much history. We will have literature to explain the history of the area and tell you some of the things you will be passing by.
